

INTRODUCTION

Welcome to our 2017 Against the Odds Annual!

It's not uncommon for historians to wax religious when discussing the Arab-Israeli Wars. In the Associated Press book on the Six-Day War, Lightning Out of Israel, several pages are devoted to Biblical, Talmudic, and Islamic notions of the history of the land of the Canaanites and lesser tribes, a land promised to Abraham in all three versions. Abraham, who travelled from Ur of the Chaldees, battled, lied, and bargained his way from what is now Iraq into "The Promised Land."

God, it was said, was impressed by him, considered him a friend, and promised him a land where Abraham's descendants would become as numerous as dust particles, a good land, flowing with milk and honey. The only problem was that Abraham's wife was unable to conceive, so she offered her Egyptian handmaiden Hagar, who readily bore a son named Ishmael. After a visit by two men with a message from God, Sarah also conceived, and delivered Isaac. Jealous of Hagar, Sarah forced Abraham to send her and Ishmael off to the desert to die, but God spared them, promising to make a great nation out of Hagar's descendants.

The Book spins this Biblical story of two brothers into the story of the conflict between Arab and Israelite. Ishmael ends up in the wilderness of Paran, believed by some to be in the Sinai (possible, since he married an Egyptian), and by others to be surrounding Mecca. Either way, Ishmael's "kingdom" paled in comparison to the lineage of Isaac, which founded a kingdom under Saul and reached its peak under Solomon.

So the Arabs, outside looking in as Israel built a nation in less than 20 years, wanted once more to rise up and remove the perceived Jewish blot from their midst and reclaim Israel as Palestine, the Roman designation for the province, totally unrelated to the kingdom of the Philistines in the Gaza area. They tried in the past but could never quite break Israeli resistance and were defeated.

Both sides claimed their root from Abraham, but both sides would find themselves locked in a struggle that today still has no end, though some Arab nations have accepted the fact that peace is better for their economy than war, and that their benefactors and supporters of the former Soviet Union could not help them achieve any victory on the battlefield.

In this issue, we explore one of those struggles, the 1967 Six-Day War. The combined might of the Arab world would come against the tiny nation of Israel, nations whose population and land masses dwarfed the Jewish state, in a contest, to use another Biblical example, of David versus Goliath. Looking back over 50 years, we know who prevailed, but with this issue, you will gain insight into why. From the macro view of Superpower conflict by proxy to the leaders of both sides, you will see it unfold as a nation struggles Against the Odds.

Thanks, as always, for joining us in the search for answers.

A Journal of History and Simulation
Against the Odds Annual 2017
published September 2019

EDITOR
Andy Nunez

PUBLISHER & ADMINISTRATIVE
Steve Rawling

LAYOUT & GAME ART
Mark Mahaffey

PROOFREADING
Jack Beckman

PRINTING COORDINATION
Phoenix Printers

DIE-CUTTING
Sure Fold Company Inc.
Philadelphia PA

AGAINST THE ODDS MAGAZINE
is copyright © 2019 by LPS, Inc.
All rights reserved.
Printed in the USA.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SIX DAYS OF WAR 2

- Road Back to War 3
- War Plans 4
- War in the Sinai 6
- War in the West Bank 8
- War on the Golan Heights 10
- Conclusion and Bibliography 12
- Sidebar: The USS Liberty 15
- Dramatis Personae 16

by Paul Rohrbaugh

THE ARAB COMMANDERS

The Bungler, the Reformer, and the Timid 21

by David W. Tschanz

WHAT WENT WRONG

Soviet Defensive Tactics in the Six Days War 26

by John D. Burt

OPERATION FOCUS

The IAF's French Connection 29

by J.D. Webster

Paul Rohrbaugh's SIX DAYS OF WAR Rules of Play

THE MILITARY HISTORY OF JERUSALEM 32

by Darin Leviloff

"MODERNIZING" WARGAMES 44

by Lewis Pulsipher

TURNING POINTS ON THE EASTERN FRONT

Barbarossa, Stalingrad, and Kursk 48

by Gregory A. Thiele

OPERATION SCABBARDS

The Planned Invasion of Cuba, 1962 52

by Blaine L. Pardoe

SHADOWS OF DIE BOMBE

Expansion Rules for Die Atombombe: The Reich's Bid to Build the Bomb 61

by Steve Rawling

